Mrs. A. H. Witzner, of Washington, D. C., was a guest of Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong at their home on Cathedral Place. Mrs. Witzner was formerly Miss Roberta Stone before her marriage and is most pleasantly remembered in Richmond.

Major and Mrs. Alexander Sidney Leitch had as their guests at a delightful luncheon at the Commonwealth Club on Friday, Mr. and Mrs. L. Irving Thomas, of Annapolis, Md. Mrs. Thomas is manager of the Standard Oil Company in the Orient, with headquarters at Amoy, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas met Major and Mrs. Leitch while they were in the East. Major Leitch was an Assistant Attorney-General of the Philippines. Mrs. Thomas is a daughter of Colonel McKenzie, of the British army, and is a very charming and interesting woman.

Society here is much interested in the marriage of Miss Mattie Williams Taylor and William James Armstrong, of Houston, Texas, which took place on Wednesday evening at 9 o'clock at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. W. R. Whitman, on Beeson. The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. James R. Taylor, D. D., of Richmond, and is widely regarded throughout the State. Dr. George Taylor, of Holston, performed the ceremony. The bride was decorated entirely in pinks, Southern smiles and ferns, and lighted candles were used on the mantels. The bride's wedding gown was an exquisite affair of white, lace, and tulle, and she carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. W. R. Whitman, who attended her sister as a maid of honor, wore a gown of pink and white, and she carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. Little Ann Whitman was flower girl, and she wore a white tulle dress with wide pink sash, and carried a French basket of pink buds. The bride entered the drawing room with her brother, George Taylor.

DIES IN OBSCURITY AT ST. PETERSBURG

Prince Michael de Lusignan Passes, and He Leaves No Heir.

BY LA MARQUESE DE POSTENOY.

SOME two or three years ago the OME of the marriage license bureau at City Hall, New York, received from St. Petersburg a letter inviting his assistance in securing a very rich wife for a prince of royal blood, Prince Michael de Lusignan, Prince of Cyprus, of Jerusalem and of Armenia, Comte de la Marche. Fifty-seven years of age and without a fortune. This prince has just died in the utmost poverty and obscurity at St. Petersburg, without leaving any heir, and with him, in modern times has ever been officially recognized by any foreign government as entitled to bear that name. The prince, according to the Russian government and to his own statements, was the only one of his name, and he was never stirred by the name of "Prince of Cyprus" or "Prince of Jerusalem," but he was the son of a nobleman, Leon, as he said.

Strictly speaking, the line of Lusignan died out with Queen Catherine Cornaro of Cyprus. The real and authentic house of Lusignan took its name from the town and castle of Lusignan, in the Department of Vienne, some twenty miles to the southwest of Poitiers. The castle and the Lusignan family were founded, according to tradition, by the fairy Melusine, who figures so largely in medieval romance, and in the traditions of French old-time legends. Descended from the ancient Kings of Albania, Melusine married Raymond, sovereign Count of Poitou, and the children born of this union became known as the Sires de Lusignan. According to the legend, she was metamorphosed every Saturday into a serpent, as a punishment for having murdered her father. Her husband, ignorant of this fact, having late one Friday night caught her in the act of undergoing the change, is asserted to have immured her in one of the lowest dungeons of the castle, from which she never emerged.

If I mention this story it is because of the order of knighthood which the bogus Prince de Lusignan in Paris has bestowed, with the greatest show of ceremony, on the Order of Melusine, and it was in the legend of Melusine, the Count d'Aulny de Gragny, the son of a cutter employed by one of the well-known London tailors, figured on the occasion of his marriage at Boston to his unfortunate American wife, Laura Lunt. It may be remembered that both were jailed in Paris on the charge of colonial swindles of Americans, notably of the widowed Mrs. Charles Hamilton Payne, (now the wife of the Duc de Choiseul-Praslin), by means of bogus paintings, and to say of pictures bearing the forged signatures of great painters, and which are quite as valuable as the real ones.

The Order of St. Catherine of Mount Sinai, which the pseudo Prince Guy de Lusignan had the impudence to confer upon Miss Clara Barton, of the Red Cross Society, (whose real name is Dolbey) escaped conviction, it was because the principal victim, Mrs. Payne, preferred at the last moment to withdraw from the prosecution, and to sacrifice the money which she was seeking to recover, rather than to submit to a cross-examination on the witness stand, which might have prevented the marriage which she was then on the eve of contracting with the half-American Duc de Choiseul-Praslin.

The Sires de Lusignan owned the petty sovereign Countships of Angoulême and of De la Marche, and one of them, Guy by the name, married Sibyl, only daughter and heiress of Amaury I., penultimate Crusader King of Jerusalem, being created on the occasion of his wedding, Count of Jaffa and of Ascalon. On the death of his father-in-law, Guy, Sire de Lusignan, was proclaimed King of Jerusalem, but in 1137 he was defeated by Sultan Saladin at the battle of Tibériade, was taken prisoner, and recovered his liberty after some years on the condition of his renouncing the title of King of Jerusalem. Violating his pledges, he resumed his empty title, of which not long afterwards he made a complete and full use, to King Richard of England, who gave him in exchange the Kingdom of Cyprus. His line reigned over Cyprus nearly 300 years, the last of the Lusignans being Queen Catherine, who sold her crown and the Island of Cyprus to Venice in 1489. A hundred years later the Turks took it from the Venetians, and in 1878 leased it to Great Britain in return for a guarantee of the territorial integrity of the Ottoman empire.

Meanwhile the Lusignans who had remained in France lost both power and prestige, and were deprived of their countships, and in 1557 their ancestral castle was razed to the ground by the Duke of Montpensier. There was a distant relative who died in 1857 as Stephen de Lusignan, Bishop of Limoges, and whose existence is commemorated by his "History of the Kingdoms of Jerusalem and of Cyprus." Then the family became extinct, at any rate in the male line, and it was only towards the close of the reign of Louis XV. of France that some of the descendants of the Lusignans, who could show a descent on the distasteful side from the Lusignans, to adopt their arms, creating him at the same time Marquis de Lusignan. His only son died in the utmost poverty in Paris in 1813, without leaving any issue.

During the reign of Nicholas I. of Russia, some Armenian agitators on the lookout for a man who could serve as a pretender and nucleus of a Nationalist movement, found an adventurer, a so-called "Prince of Cyprus," who was willing to bear that name in his vain belief of the former Lusignan Kings of Cyprus. For want of something better, they took the name of the Lusignans, and the title of Prince of Cyprus, and created a number of Armenian, and even Greek, Lusignan pretenses.

It ended Russia's policy at the time to countenance his pretensions—it was on the eve of the Crimean War. He was treated with the rank of colonel in the Russian army and hailed as prince—not king—of Armenia, of Cyprus and Jerusalem. But when Nicholas found that the Armenians did not give the promised assistance to the Russian army of invasion, he was "disgraced" to be dismissed from the army, gave him money to depart, and declined to have anything further to do with him. He died in poverty, leaving an only son, Michael, whose death has just taken place, leaving surviving a wife of one of the hotels in Milan, this son went to St. Petersburg with the object of endeavoring to obtain some grandiose compensation for the treatment which his father had received. It is understood that he did receive some pecuniary assistance as an act of charity from the present Czar, who also caused the withdrawal of a charge of forgery and fraud for which at one moment he had been arrested in the Russian capital.

With regard to the said-discount Prince Guy de Lusignan in Paris, founder of the Order of Melusine and of St. Catherine of Mount Sinai, his real name was Kalifa. He was the son of an Armenian stone-mason, and with his brother was educated by public charity at the Armenian monastery of St. Lazarus, at Venice. Both were trained for the priesthood, and on a branch school of the monastery being established at Paris, they were appointed chorists in the capacity of teachers. The school, however, became involved in trouble with the police and was closed. The two brothers thereupon made their way to Rome, from whence one went to Constantinople, where he became archbishop of the Armenian and Greek Rites. There he was known as Khoren, instead of Kalifa, and died recently, after being implicated in a conspiracy against the life of Sultan Abdul Hamid. The elder brother, Guy, returned to Paris, where he first gave out that he was a grandson of the great Napoleon's Mameluke Yusuf Bey, who was killed at Austerlitz and subsequently blossomed forth as Guy de Lusignan, Prince of Jerusalem, of Cyprus and of Armenia. The claim to be descended from any of the authentic Lusignans, even on the distasteful side, were never submitted to or admitted by any competent genealogical authority. Nor were his assumed titles ever recognized by any monarch or government, while the orders conferred by him are valueless, since they cannot be worn at any European court, and any one venturing to adorn himself therewith in society will expose himself to ridicule. He married, first of all, a wealthy widow of one of the Gueules, and after her death a rich English woman of the name of Broadley, and it was on the strength of money acquired by
